Story

A student in University College, Dundee, Edward Jackson enlisted early in the war and saw much fighting both in Flanders and Palestine. He was wounded in the battle at "Hill 60", Flanders, 1 December 1915. On rejoining his Battalion he was transferred to the East and took part in the capture of Samarra and Tekrit, Mesopotamia. He was again wounded near Beit Lidd, Samaria, Palestine, and died at the early age of 23. "He was awarded the Military Cross for great gallantry, energy and coolness at Beit Lidd on 20th September 1918. He led his company in the attack on a position strongly held by machine guns. All the leading men of his company were killed or wounded, and the attack held up; but he, accompanied by his orderly, went forward with a Lewis gun, which he continued to fire with great coolness until severely wounded. His fine example of gallantry and devotion to duty was a source of inspiration to his men, and was largely responsible for the ultimate success of the attack."
